Stat Alert – October 4, 2007

A report from the U.S. Census Bureau, Reasons People Do Not Work: 2004 (http://www.census.gov/prod/2007pubs/p70-111.pdf/), includes an interesting analysis comparing race/ethnicity and educational attainment levels with reasons nonworkers cited for not working. In particular, workers with higher educational attainment levels were much less likely to cite "Unable to find work" and "Chronic illness/disability" and more likely to cite "Retired" as reasons for not working than people with lower educational attainment levels. The report also analyzes the data by race/ethnicity.

The Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education (WICHE) strives to maintain excellent communication with the education policy and research communities. Just read Heather's whole letter. Man oh man oh man. There will be an uprising in the State's disabled community if they don't feel we're there to support them. Just thinking of the daily challenges secondary provider face daily in their own homes, we can't let them think we're not "there for them". Again I don't know this issue, but maybe I can look at a small change on the Health Council membership to look at things differently a bit? Only 2 or 3 more meetings so it is only a small thing.

Subject: autism meeting

I attended a meeting of the Governor's Council on Disabilities and Special Education Wed night and heard some interesting public comments regarding a meeting many of them attended Tuesday. Commissioner Jackson spoke at that one, and the common response from people at the Council meeting was "appalling." Apparently many of the people couldn't believe some of the comments coming from Ms. Jackson regarding the services needed for the disabled. I couldn't follow everything they were saying, and sure wished I would've been there to hear myself, but I think what they were saying was that Jackson seemed to be downplaying the immediate need for services for our autistic and other disabled children and young adults. I think I heard she said our state will be healthy soon and won't need the services of non-profits like the Arc and Hope Cottages, and that we should have one entity to deliver services. Does she mean babies won't be born disabled, and those of us who have disabled kids now can't be serviced adequately? So many of use the different organizations to help us. Personally, we've used Hope, the Arc, Challenge Alaska, and Catholic Social Services to meet various needs of Karcher.

Sarah, you can't imagine the lack of support we parents are experiencing these days, mostly because of the lack of funding for proper recruiting, training, and retaining qualified providers. There is a wait list out there that Karcher has been on for over 8 years. There is a work force crisis such that parents using the Arc for support don't have providers from one day to the next. Several people got up and spoke at the meeting I attended and said they are happy for the new administration, have confidence in the new governor, and hope the mess left by Murkowski can be cleaned up. For once I finally got the nerve to get up in front of a crowd and speak. I was so totally out of my comfort zone and was absolutely scared to death, but decided the crowd needed to know that you understood our frustrations and had first-hand experience because of Karcher. Naturally I broke down when I talked about Karcher, but somehow I finished, in somewhat of a mental blackout. Afterwards several people from out of town approached me and thanked me for expressing my views and your passion for our cause. I know you meet thousands of people around the state, but a few of these parents said you gave them personal attention, appreciated you taking the time to listen to them, let them take pictures, and remembered their names.

Someone gave me a printout of the names of people on the State of AK's Health Council and pointed out that no one from the Autism Ad Hoc Committee was on the list. Don't know what I'm supposed to do about that, but I do know some of the people on the committee and extremely knowledgeable about our situation.

One of the most common, scariest, and heartwrenching topics we parents of special needs kids have is what will happen to our child(ren) when we die. Who will take care of them? What does Alaska have to offer? Even if parents die wealthy, what services and providers are available? What good is our money if there aren't enough qualified providers to help our kids? Do you know how frightening it is to think of Karcher out there in society alone, trying to take care of himself, work, and generally function in our society? I think middle school is stressful for him and us now; I can't imagine what it's going to be like for him in 10, 20 years.

Sorry about this lengthy disjointed email. Some people I run into these days think I've got a direct hotline to your office and can influence your decisions. I tell them you're doing a great job, and let them know not to be afraid to get out there and educate others about the situation.

Thanks for caring,

Heather

Given the concern about Pebble, mining, and resource development in general; our large project team has been working hard on a presentation on how the permit process works for mining. The plan is to use this presentation around the state in towns, villages, conventions, chamber meetings, legislature, native corporations etc. The goal is to show Alaskans that Alaska has a competent permitting process.

We would like to give a preview to you and whoever you would like from your staff. The presentation will take 30 to 40 minutes plus any questions.

God bless, Tom

Also, I called the Mayor's office and spoke to Joy. I told her we rec'd a letter from the Mayor to the Governor that was addressed to Wasilla. I told her that the Governor works in the Anchorage office and should the Mayor want his correspondence expedited, he should send it to 550 W. 7th Avenue address...and that I wasn't quite sure why the Mayor would have sent it there in the first place. I was very pleasant.

Subject: first grade classroom request

Dear Governor Palin,

First, I want to thank you for all the hard work you are doing to make our great state of Alaska even greater. I can only imagine how difficult a job that is. So I have a humble request for you for assistance for my first grade classroom at Harborview School, right across from where Piper was in Ms. Winegar's class last year.

Our class is studying renewable energy this year, and we are working on a bio-gas generator. A bio-gas generator creates methane from the billions of microorganisms living in the digestive systems of, ideally, a ruminant. Ruminants include cows, goats, or deer. Our class is using materials gathered from hardware and plumbing stores in Juneau to build a small generator in our classroom. When we started this project, I thought I could find goat manure in Juneau, but I have not been successful. So, Governor Palin, someone suggested that I turn to you.

Since you are from the Mat-Su valley, a teacher here suggested that you or one of your staff who travel to Juneau might be able to bring me some cow manure from cows near your area for our project. We need at least two gallons, and perhaps more if it were possible. If you or a member of your staff heading to Juneau would be willing to bring this down in a timely manner, we would truly appreciate it. I also thought you might have fun being involved in a fun, hands-on (using gloves, of course) science activity with first graders.

I would guess this would be an unusual request for a governor. Yet, you seem to be the type of governor that does not let tradition get in the way of rolling up your sleeves and getting the job done. Therefore, I thought I'd give it a chance and contact you.

Please let me know if you would be willing to help us on this project. I, and my nineteen first graders, appreciate any consideration you can give this request. If you are NOT interested, knowing that would also be helpful.

Kind regards,

Fred Hiltner
